Campaign Against Depleted Uranium

CADU campaigns domestically and internationally for a ban on the use of uranium in all conventional weapons. RBS and Barclays are investing in US arms manufacturers who produce uranium weapons. These weapons have been linked to an increase in cancers and illness in civilian populations where they have been used. CADU urges customers of these banks to close their accounts and move to a more ethical supplier such as the Co-op. Don't forget to tell them why you are doing it.

The Royal Bank of Scotland has repeatedly formed part of an international banking syndicate that has provided revolving credit facilities and loans to Alliant Tech Systems (ATK) worth in excess of $500m. In 2004 and 2005 it again formed a syndicate to provide revolving credit facilities to General Dynamics. In each case the facility was valued at $1bn. General Dynamics manufactures a range of uranium weaponry for the US military. Many of its products have been sold to contentious regimes such as Pakistan, Israel and Saudi Arabia.

Barclays has significant shareholdings in both Alliant Tech Systems (ATK) and Gencorp. ATK is the largest ammunition manufacturer in the US and in addition to uranium weapons it also produces land mines, cluster bombs and parts for Trident nuclear missiles. Gencorp's wholly owned subsidiary Aerojet Ordnance Tennessee Inc. produces uranium weapons and again has interests in rocket propulsion, warheads and tactical weapon systems. In 2007, Barclays owned shares amounting to 3.1% of ATK and 4.8% of Gencorp.
